Satellite Export Control Update

Sheppard Mullin Washington, D.C. office

03.20.2013

The National Defense Authorization Act for 2013 has authorized satellite export licensing to move from the State Department back to the Commerce Department as part of the Export Control Reform. Join Sheppard Mullin for a lunch program by partners Curtis Dombek and Scott Maberry with an introduction by Brian Weimer, leader of the firm's Communication Practice. Curt currently serves on the Commerce Department Technical Advisory Committee working with the Administration to write the new regulations. You will learn:

- Which agency will regulate which aspects of satellites, earth stations and related equipment
- How parts and components will be treated
- How Technical Assistance Agreements and foreign nationals will be affected
- How launch sites and destination country policies are likely to change
