Overview

Protecting a company's substantial investment in drug and biologic discovery is key to a product's commercial success. Market exclusivity has the potential to drive innovation for large and small molecules, and also orphan drugs and other niche drugs with a limited market. In this session, we will explore strategies for maximizing exclusivity from both a patent and FDA regulatory perspective. We also will discuss the opportunities and challenges of attaining market exclusivity from in-house attorneys at both large and small molecule companies.
