

Let Technology Reduce Your Legal Malpractice Risks

The Recorder
09.16.2014

Articles in legal publications around the country during the last six months confirm what many lawyers already know—lawyers are increasingly the target of costly and damaging malpractice claims. Yet bad stories with bad endings and bad headlines rarely start as a verdict or settlement. Many times, these headlines-in-the-making start as billing disputes. Other times, a contract drafted by the firm is questioned or litigated. Or a bank represented by the firm fails. Increasingly, it is just an unhappy investor, the creditor of a failed business looking for a deep pocket or litigation that took an ugly turn. On occasion, it is an impaired attorney whose personal problems have become firm problems.

To read this article in its entirety (subscription required), please visit: <http://tinyurl.com/prhdwsc>.

Attorneys

Suzanne Y. Badawi